

Webster Weekly 5-18-2020

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE:

Dear Webster Parents,

These unprecedented times have presented our community with many challenges. Please know that we remain committed to you and your family's success. Webster teachers and staff have critical online instruction in progress for the remainder of the school year. Recognizing that this model of learning has its challenges, I am seeking your input on how this experience has been for your child(ren) and family. I am committed to working together with you to help make the transition to online learning as smooth as possible. Please take a moment to answer a short survey about Distance Learning at Webster. While we do know that school will begin on August 20, 2020, no decision has been made regarding the format of school programming. Your feedback will help us make these important programmatic decisions.

Signs Your Child is Struggling

We are in uncertain times, and that uncertainty can lead to stress. Children and teens process their feelings differently than adults, so the signs and symptoms they exhibit may appear unrelated to the COVID19 situation. Keep an eye out for some of these symptoms below to know if your child is feeling stressed, and reach out to the Wellness Center for an evaluation if necessary:

1. For younger children, it is common to have a “regression” of behaviors they have outgrown, such as bedwetting, toileting accidents, or tantrums. This is usually a general sign that your child is feeling anxious or stressed.
2. Older children and teens often “act out” through irritability, anger, or defiance, whereas younger children may have excessive crying spells or crankiness.
3. Avoidance of activities enjoyed in the past, isolation, or withdrawal from family or friends can be a sign that a child or teen is feeling sad. Children and teens may also only become interested in solo activities such as playing video games or checking out with electronics.
4. Nightmares, sleepwalking, or night terrors can be common in younger children, whereas older children may develop unhealthy sleeping patterns such as staying up too late, sleeping in too late, or excessive sleeping throughout the day.
5. Difficulty with attention and concentration or poor school performance may also be a sign that your child is struggling to manage their feelings at this time, especially if your child had not been struggling previously.
6. Sometimes if children or teens are not able to express themselves verbally, they will somaticize their feelings in the form of headaches, stomachaches, or general body pain.

These signs are not all encompassing or one size fits all. Children and teens are often unable to connect the dots between their feelings and their behavior, so it’s up to the adults in their lives to help them figure it out and learn new ways to process their emotions. Please reach out if you are noticing changes in your child or teen’s behavior, we are all in this together!

If you have any questions or want to set up a video session on Zoom, please contact our Director, Randi Goodman (LMFT #52964) at wellnessinfo@bgcmalibu.org or at 310-691-6523.
